THE PROBLEM

parents who experience high levels of anxiety and stress due to our unjust immigration system.

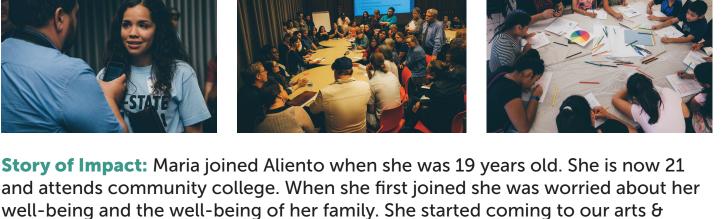

understanding of how many sectors impact undocumented children, youth, and families. Our Model: We transform trauma into hope + action! We believe that through art healing, leadership development, educating allies we will increase workshops & an organizing model that is rooted in the intersectional the advocacy needed to change policies and acknowledge the resiliency and develop a pipeline of today's and tomorrow's undocumented and migrant leaders.

healing workshops with all her family. Since then, she has created poems and performed at our open mics, has organized and co-led a training for allies at her community college, has shared her testimony in front of the community college board, and has spoken to policy makers about the importance of providing solutions for students like her. She has also ensured that her family is involved. Her little brother who is around nine yeas of age has participated in our arts and healing workshops and gained the confidence to now be one our constant performers at our monthly open mics, where he creates and casts magic spells. Maria is one of the many young 8,000 youth that we work with. Our entry point is the impact that trauma has on our community. We are intentional about transforming trauma into hope through art and creation while giving our youth and children the tools to become their own advocates to change the structures, policies, and environments that create trauma for the undocumented and mixed status families in the first place.
